HITIQ Expands Technology Footprint into Northern Hemisphere Rugby League

- Rugby Football League is set to utilise HITIQ's Nexus Impact Sensors in the Season 2023;
- The Rugby Football League is the premier professional rugby league competition in the Northern Hemisphere based in the UK; and
- HITIQ's Nexus technology will cover 100 male and female players over two years with the data collected to provide valuable insights to improve player welfare in the RFL.

Transformative concussion management technology company, HITIQ Limited (ASX: HIQ) (HITIQ or the Company), is pleased to announce a two-year commercial agreement that will see the Nexus impact sensor technology utilised by the Rugby Football League (RFL) across the 2023-24 seasons.

Revenue to be generated under the agreement represents less than 15% of HITIQ's operating revenues reported for the year ended 30 June 2022.

The HITIQ technology has been purchased by Leeds Beckett University who have a long-standing partnership with the RFL. There will be 100 male and female players wearing the HITIQ Nexus technology across the next two years in an effort to improve player wellness by monitoring player head impacts in both training and competition.

Commenting on the agreement, HITIQ CEO, Mike Vegar, said:

> "We are very pleased to expand our presence into the Northern Hemisphere with a strong league like the RFL. Rugby has an immediate need for our technology and we are pleased to be in a position to help facilitate the transition to a progressive approach for player health and wellbeing."
