Market commentary

Amid volatility driven by AI bubble concerns and the prolonged US government shutdown, global listed infrastructure displayed its resilience, posting a positive return in November (+3.1% in A$ terms) and strongly outperforming broader global (+0.1%) and local (-2.7%) equities. The asset class strengthened as investors sought out stocks with well-defined earnings and as expectations of further US interest rate cuts grew.

Midstream Energy posted the strongest gains, driven by a rebound in natural gas-levered companies and anticipated gas-fired generation growth. Gas Distribution stocks also outperformed on the continued expectation they would benefit from surging power demand associated with AI technologies.

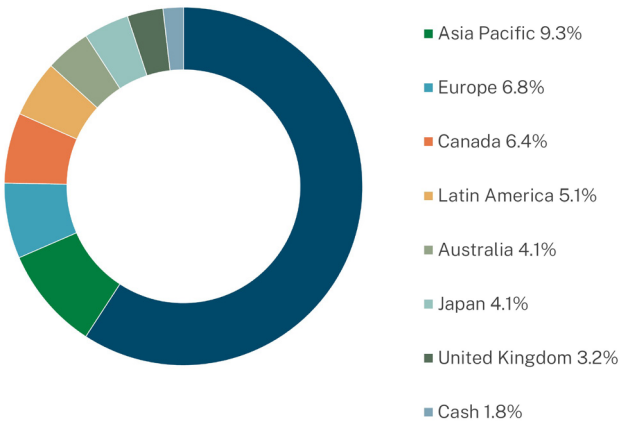

Argo Infrastructure's portfolio outperformed the benchmark index, with a holding in passenger railway operator Central Japan Railway contributing to performance. The high-speed rail operator's share price was bolstered by better-than-expected third-quarter earnings and revenue, and by the company's announcement that it is raising fares, which could result in a dividend increase or further share buybacks.
